	Kelly Albanir is a Senior Manager of Sustainability Reporting and Assurance in EY’s Climate Change and Sustainability Services (CCaSS) group, based in New Jersey. A New Jersey native, she grew up playing sports and developing an appreciation for natural resources and agriculture working on the local dairy farm, processing firewood for her family’s woodland management plan, and participating in 4-H and FFA. At Cornell, she walked on to the Women’s Varsity Rowing team and studied accounting. The topic paper for her M.P.S. focused on the intersection of business and sustainability which opened her mind to the possibility of a professional career in sustainability. She graduated from Cornell with a B.S. in Applied Economics and Management in 2015 and an M.P.S. in Applied Economics and Management in 2016. After Cornell, she joined EY’s Audit practice in Boston where she obtained her CPA license and continued to row on the Charles River. Shortly thereafter, an opportunity arose to transfer to EY’s CCaSS group and she hasn’t looked back! She now applies the same principles of financial accounting and auditing to sustainability subject matter, especially greenhouse gas emissions. By providing assurance over sustainability subject matter, she is part of the process to help companies report on sustainability topics that are important to them and their stakeholders in a transparent and reliable way. Outside of EY, she is an avid outdoors lover – spending most of her free time landscaping, planting, and managing a woodland management plan of her own.
